Section

- 1      Legislative days. Article IV, section 12 of the Minnesota Constitution provides that the legislature may meet in regular session each biennium for up to 120 legislative days. The Constitution provides that “legislative day” shall be defined by law. Under current law, a legislative day is a day when either the House or the Senate is called to order.

Under this bill a legislative day would be a day when either the House or Senate gives any bill a first, second, or third reading or votes to override a governor’s veto.
