To: Interested Parties

From: Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research

A new survey among likely voters in Minnesota finds broad and deep support for medical aid in dying. In principle, Minnesotans believe medical aid in dying should be a legal option for terminally ill individuals by a margin of 53 points, 73 percent - 20 percent, including 55 percent who strongly believe so.

A similar share of the electorate - 73 percent (49 percent strongly) - supports legislation that would make that option available for people who are over the age of 18, terminally ill and deemed mentally capable by medical experts.

[^0]The breadth of the support for this legislation is striking. There is bi-partisan support for this legislation and support across generations, geography and religious faiths.

Finally, the survey also found that 61 percent of voters would be more likely to support a candidate who supports legislation providing a legal option for medical aid in dying while just 21 percent would oppose a candidate who does. Much like support for a legal option itself, support for candidates with this position extends across demographic, religious and partisan lines.

And thinking about the election in November, would you be more or less likely to support a candidate for the Minnesota legislature who supports legislation that will allow people with less than six months to live to request medical aid in dying from their personal doctor?
